

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

For HENRY J. ALLEN,

A. A. Thompson

Mr. Raymond having received a majority of the whole number of votes cast was declared to be duly elected.

Mr. Varnum and Mr. Elderkin conducted the Speaker to the Chair, whereupon he delivered the following address :

Gentlemen of the Assembly : I tender you my thanks for the honor you have been pleased to confer upon me, and shall endeavor to discharge the duties, and to meet the responsibilities which that honor brings with it, by a careful attention to the progress of public business, and under a due sense of the importance of the trust which you have devolved upon me.

You will soon adopt rules for your guidance and government in the deliberations of the present session. I shall seek to give such vigorous, practical effect to those rules as will best attain the end they are designed to secure. I shall often need, gentlemen, and I do not doubt I shall always have, your most charitable indulgence in this endeavor.

Nothing, permit me to remind you, can more effectually promote the easy and beneficent discharge of public duty, than a prevailing sense of the magnitude of the interests committed to our care. Let us bear always in mind that we are making laws for the greatest, the richest, the most powerful of the American States—that the topics which will demand our attention are those which touch most nearly the dearest interests of three millions of people. That in regard to our sister states, and to the Federal Union, we have rights, relations, and duties which demand our care, and that our action here may shape the character, guide the growth, and control the destinies of this great State long after we shall have ceased to take any part in its affairs.

Under such a sense of the greatness and importance of our task, and with proper dependence upon the wisdom that cometh from above, let us address ourselves to the duties that lie before us.

A committee from the Senate appeared and announced that that body was ready to proceed to business.

On motion of Mr. Elderkin,

Resolved, That the rules and orders of the last Assembly be adopted for the government of this House until otherwise ordered.

On motion of Mr. Wheeler,

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to elect a Clerk ; that the list of members be called, and that each member as his name is called rise in his place and openly nominate the person whom he desires for Clerk.

The Clerk then proceeded to call the list of members, and they rose in their seats and nominated as follows :

The private secretary of the Governor appeared in the Assembly Chamber and delivered the message of the Governor, which was received and read in the words following to wit :

Fellow-citizens of the Senate and the Assembly :

In taking a general survey of the condition of the Commonwealth, whose interests have been entrusted to your charge by a confiding people, we witness the most gratifying evidences of public prosperity. It is impossible to contemplate the varied blessings which have fallen to our lot, as a people, without emotions of fervent gratitude to the Supreme Being, whose benignant favor has protected and sustained us through all past vicissitudes.

The State continues to advance with august strides on its upward mission of freedom and civilization. The republican institutions reared by our ancestors, and preserved in full vigor by the enlightened vigilance of the people, have been vindicated by experience, as the system of government most favorable to the dignity and happiness of the human race. Some of those institutions were reformed and liberalized by our new Constitution. Political power was brought nearer the people, by investing them with the direct choice of their judicial and administrative agents, and it is a source of high felicitation that the successful result of this organic change has furnished fresh proof of the capacity of our citizens for an intelligent discharge of the responsibilities of self-government.

At no former period in our history have the affairs of the State presented a more encouraging aspect. The year which has recently closed was peculiarly prosperous and auspicious. The pestilence which visited our cities the previous year, and which continues its desolating ravages on some portions of the continent disappeared beyond our borders, and was followed by a season of unexampled public health. The earth yielded an unusual abundance to remunerate the toil of its cultivators, and industry in other forms, including many branches of trade and manufactures, found active and profitable employment. With our rapid progress in wealth and population, it is gratifying to observe the constant advancement of our people in moral and intellectual improvement. The wider dissemination of knowledge among the masses, the influences shed abroad by our seminaries of learning, the constant increase of religious and benevolent institutions for the alleviation of human sorrows, the peaceful conquests of invention and the arts, all tend to elevate the condition of society and to strengthen the foundations of popular government. These genial influences, combining to augment the happiness and exalt the character of the State, have been cherished by the liberal spirit of past legislation; and I cannot too earnestly commend the enlightened action of your predecessors, in this regard, and especially in seconding the efforts of humane individuals to improve the moral and physical condition of the unfortunate and the humble, as an example worthy of your emulation.

It affords me much satisfaction to congratulate you on the sound and healthful condition of our State finances. It became my duty before retiring from the office of Comptroller, to prepare an annual report exhibiting the condition of the Treasury, and of the several funds at the close of the last fiscal year, to which, with the suggestions therein contained, I would respectfully invite your attention.

It appears that after meeting all the appropriations payable during the last fiscal year, from the ordinary revenues, there remained a balance in the General Fund at the close of the year, of $54,521.28.

It is estimated that the receipts of the current year, from ordinary sources, will be sufficient to defray all the usual expenses of the State, and that the resources of the General Fund, as now established, will be found sufficient at all times for the support of the government without an increase of debt or taxation. There is an evident necessity, however, for economy in the expenditures; and I trust you will feel the importance of keeping the appropriations within the reliable means of the treasury. In addition to the ordinary current revenues, the Comptroller's report exhibits certain balances due to the General Fund from arrears of taxes and other sources, from which it is believed the treasury will realize over $350,000 within the ensuing two years. It is with special reference to this resource that I deem it expedient in the present communication to recommend some appropriations for new institutions and improvements, which are conceived to be essential to the public welfare.

The aggregate amount of the State debt, on the 30th day of September last, was as follows:—

Canal debt,	$16,171,109 16
General Fund debt,	6,359,698 32
	<hr/>
	$22,530,802 48

exclusive of the stock loaned by the State to certain railroad corporations. It will appear from the report of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, that the operations of the Sinking Fund are steadily reducing the canal debt. The application of the canal revenues in the manner prescribed by the State constitution, will discharge the entire State debt now existing, in the year 1868.

Our canals continue to yield a rich return. The amount received for canal tolls, including interest, rents, &c., during the last fiscal year, was $3,486,172.30, being a small increase upon the receipts of the preceding year. After paying all the expenses of superintendence, collection and repairs, and $1,850,000 into the Sinking Funds and the General Fund, a surplus remained from the revenues of the last fiscal year of $800,206.49, applicable to the completion of the Black River and Genesee Valley canals, and the enlargement of the Erie canal.

Previous to the last season of navigation, a considerable reduction was made by the Canal Board in the rates of toll on certain leading articles of transportation. Opinions will probably differ as to the precise effect of this reduction upon the trade and income of the canals; but it is generally believed that it attracted additional tonnage sufficient to equalize the diminution of revenue.

Serious apprehensions are entertained that the trade of the Erie canal will be impaired by the competition of railroads and other rival avenues in and out of the State, unless early and effectually measures are adopted to cheapen the expense of canal transportation. It is conceded on all hands that no material reduction can be made in the cost of canal freight without reducing the rates of toll, until the enlargement of the Erie canal shall enable our forwarders to increase the capacity of their boats. This important object will be attained in a partial degree by the completion of the new locks, on the enlarged plan. The reconstruction and enlargement of these structures has been nearly perfected, and new locks on the large scale will be brought into use on the entire line of the Erie canal at the opening of navigation the coming season, with the exception of five which are located at points where the route of the canal is to be changed. These cannot be reconstructed and made available without the simultaneous construction of several miles of new channel, estimated to cost over a million of dollars. But it is proposed to lengthen the old locks at these points, by temporary structures in such manner that the entire canal may be navigated by boats having an additional length of 28 feet as compared with those now in use. It is not to be disguised, however, that the enlargement of the locks renders a corresponding enlargement of the sections more necessary than before.

The quantity of water required for passing boats is greatly increased by the enlarged size of the new locks. It is found extremely difficult, and in some cases impossible, to force the necessary supply for this purpose through the narrow channel of the old canal. Much difficulty and embarrassment were experienced from this fact, during the last season of navigation. Notwithstanding the vigorous efforts of the Commissioners and their subordinates, it was found impracticable to sustain the necessary height of water on some of the long levels, and it resulted that boats were frequently grounded and the navigators were subjected to injurious delays, vexation and expense. There is no reason to believe that this embarrassment will continue to increase from year to year, until the enlargement of the entire canal shall have been completed.

How far the descending tonnage can be increased, while the canal retains its present limited dimensions, is a question which gives rise to some diversity of opinion. All admit that we have approached very near the maximum capacity of the old canal, during the spring and autumn months. That a large increase in the amount of tonnage, adequate to the rapid growth of our trade is practicable in the present condition of our canal navigation, cannot safely be assumed.

The future policy of the State in reference to the Erie canal and its enlargement, forms one of the most important and difficult subjects which will occupy the attention of the Legislature. I must ask you to enter upon its consideration with an enlightened appreciation of the momentous interests involved in your deliberations, and with an earnest purpose to adopt a line of action worthy of the past triumphs of the State in the consummation of great designs, and in some degree commensurate with its present power and its future destiny. It is difficult to form an adequate estimate of the benefits so vast and varied as our people have derived from the original construction of a water communication connecting the Atlantic with the western lakes. The effects of this great work upon the wealth, prosperity and advancement of the State, surpassed the most ardent anticipations of its early advocates. It has doubled the trade and population of our great commercial emporium; and if we but emulate the statesmanship of its authors by adequately increasing its facilities, it is destined to pour into our lap, during all future time, a stream of tribute rich and inexhaustible beyond any example in history, ancient or modern.

If we are not wanting in the wisdom and sagacity required to perpetuate the advantages so happily secured, no rival efforts can deprive us of our constantly growing commerce with the fertile States bordering on the great lakes and the upper Missisissippi. Limiting our view to the beneficial results of the Erie canal, within our own borders, we witness the creation of flourishing towns, the growth of cities; the conversion of vast forests into fruitful fields, the abode of a happy and virtuous yeomanry; the profitable employment of enterprise and industry in every form of production; and the consequent addition of hundreds of millions in value to the property of our citizens. It seems impossible that the people should forget the source of blessings like these, or neglect the means necessary for their preservation. In less than ten years after the completion of the canal, its revenues having returned to the treasury the entire cost of its construction, it was seen that an increased capacity must soon be given to it to accommodate the internal commerce, of which it was the outlet.

It is near sixteen years since the Legislature of 1835, after mature deliberation, determined to enter upon the enlargement of the Erie canal. I do not propose to review or discuss the changing policy which has retarded the prosecution of the undertaking. Our responsibilities relate to the present condition and future welfare of the State, rather than to past events which belong to the province of the historian. Since the work of enlargement was commenced we have expended upon it the sum of $15,990,443.81. Some of the great objects of this expenditure cannot be fully realized until the work is completed. In the meantime the annual loss of interest on the amount invested at six per cent is over one million of dollars, to which must be added an annual loss of at least another million in the needless cost of transportation, which would have been saved by the completion of the enlargement; and these unnecessary sacrifices must increase, from year to year, with the tardy progress of the expenditure. The amount already lost under these heads cannot be less than ten or fifteen millions. The question then arises, how much longer shall this be borne?

According to the most recent estimates of the Engineer Department, it will require eleven millions of dollars to finish the enlargement of the Erie canal, and $1,165,000 to complete the Genesee Valley and Black River canals. If we assume that the canal revenues, after paying the yearly contributions to the General Fund and the Sinking Funds required by the Constitution, will continue to yield a net surplus of $800,000 per annum, it follows that the completion of this great undertaking, so urgently demanded by every consideration of public policy, must be postponed until the year 1866. A net revenue of $1,000,000 per annum would effect the same object in 1863.

An important question is presented to the consideration of the people and their representatives, whether the consummation of the work shall be deferred for this long series of years, or whether some judicious and practical plan shall be adopted to ensure its completion at the earliest period consistent with economy of expenditure and the due preservation of the public credit.

As an original question, free from the embarrassments which have been thrown around it by the financial provisions of the Constitution, the path of interest and duty would be too plain to admit of hesitation. Under the guidance of Clinton and his compeers, the Erie canal was constructed in a period of less than eight years, in the face of formidable obstacles, in defiance of a powerful opposition, and amid the doubts and embarrassments always attendant upon a bold and untried experiment. Genius and energy triumphed over every difficulty. This grand result was achieved at a time when the State was comparatively feeble in resources. Since that day our population has advanced to upwards of three millions, and the wealth of the community has been multiplied more than four-fold.

It is indeed remarkable, after an experience like ours, that any portion of our people should deem it wise or necessary to occupy a quarter of a century in enlarging and perfecting a work, which was constructed originally under circumstances far more difficult, in less than one-third of that period. It becomes necessary in our deliberations on this subject, to consider the effect and operation of the financial provisions embodied in the Constitution of 1846.

Not only are a large portion of the canal revenues specifically set apart for the payment of the existing debt, but the power of the Legislature to create new liabilities (beyond $1,000,000) is virtually annulled. These constitutional provisions are the supreme law, and must be observed with scrupulous fidelity. Although their operation may thwart or defeat objects of the highest public concern, so long as they remain in force, they are not to be evaded or disregarded.

It is important therefore to enquire whether by any and what safe means, consistent with the constitutional restrictions referred to, the early completion of the enlargement may be ensured? Three distinct modes have been suggested for the attainment of this object, each of which will doubtless receive your careful consideration. By the first it is proposed to obtain the necessary funds by an issue of certificates transferring in advance, for a sufficient series of years, that portion of the canal revenues which is devoted by the Constitution to the enlargement of the Erie canal. That it is within the competency of the Legislature to dispose of this part of the tolls, in the manner indicated, is confidently asserted by some of our ablest jurists. It is obvious, however, that an absolute sale of the revenues, at the risk of the purchaser, without recourse to the State, is the only mode by which they can be realized in anticipation, without a violation of the provision restraining the creation of a new debt. A mere pledge of revenues, as a security for moneys advanced on them, would constitute a debt against the State, in a new and unusual form. An unconditional transfer of the future tolls involves practical difficulties which cannot be disregarded.

It may be doubted whether the necessary advances could be obtained on this basis, on terms satisfactory to the State. Capitalists would naturally require either the ultimate guarantee of the State that the revenues shall prove adequate, or a stipulation that the rates of toll shall not be reduced below a certain scale. The first of these conditions is incompatible with the Constitution; the second is subject to serious if not conclusive objections. Important considerations of policy would dictate that the unqualified power of regulating the tolls should continue to reside in the Canal Board.

The next plan to be considered is the authorization of a loan under the 12th section of the financial article. Before a law for this purpose could take effect it must be submitted to the people for their ratification; and the Constitution requires that every such law "shall provide for the collection of a direct annual tax to pay the interest on the debt as it falls due."

No sufficient reason, founded in equity or expediency, can be assigned for the imposition of a direct tax upon the State at large to pay interest on any portion of the cost of the enlargement, when the canal revenues are fully adequate to that object. Whilst all sections of the State are interested in the early consummation of the work, and will derive large benefits from the increased revenues which it will yield, a direct tax would operate unequally and unjustly, and would be unacceptable to the counties remote from the line of the improvement.

The third and last resort, is an amendment of the Constitution in the manner prescribed by the instrument itself.

Whatever diversity of opinion may exist in regard to the wisdom of the policy which governed the convention of 1846 in this respect, I cannot doubt that a large majority of our citizens of all parties, in view of the steadily increasing revenues of the canal would now unite in conferring upon the Legislature the necessary authority to create a loan of seven or eight millions on a pledge of the surplus revenues, for the early completion of the enlargement. The proposition to be submitted for this purpose should include a provision requiring an additional contribution from the canal revenues to the Sinking Fund, sufficient for the payment of interest on the new loan, and eventual reimbursement of the principal. To give effect to the amendment under consideration, it must be agreed to by two successive Legislatures, and then approved by a majority of the people.

If the amendment should be adopted by the present and succeeding Legislature, and then sanctioned by the people, the Legislature of 1853 would be enabled to create the loan, and the final completion of the enlargement would be accomplished before the opening of navigation in 1856.

I am aware that the sentiment of our people is adverse to the accumulation of a large public debt, and none will deny the propriety of exercising such precautions as are needed to prevent the imposition of heavy taxes on the present or future generations. It is believed, however, that a resort to the public credit for means to expedite the enlargement of the Erie canal, is free from the objections commonly urged against an increase of the State debt. Such a loan would expose the people to no new burthens. The present revenues of the canal are sufficient to ensure the discharge of the new liability, and of our existing debt, at no distant period. It has been shown that the present money value of the canals, adopting the average revenues of the last five years, is equal to a capital of $41,967,414.50, at six per cent interest. The completion of the work for which the loan is needed will add largely to the financial resources of the treasury. There is a wide distinction to be observed between debts judiciously made in furtherance of trade and intercourse, and the gigantic debts which weigh down the people in most of the European nations. The former serve to develop latent resources and open new fountains of wealth, creating the revenues required for their extinguishment, and infusing fresh vigor into all the elements of public prosperity. Widely different is the influence of a public debt, originating in wars of ambition, in the profligacy of courts, or the vanity of princes. Expenditures of this nature yield no return, and the burthens resulting from them press with crushing force upon the toiling millions, from age to age. I entertain a firm conviction that the enlargement of the canal will produce a large increase of revenue, furnishing all the means required to pay the cost of the work, and that its income, after paying the debt, will ultimately relieve our citizens from taxation for support of government, and at the same time yield ample fund for the support of education and the prosecution of new improvements. A question like this, so eminently practical, and surely within the comprehension of a sagacious population like ours, may safely be left to their own intelligent decision.

The funds dedicated to the support of education are in a flourishing condition. The capital of the Common School Fund, on the 30th of September last, was $2,290,673.23—being an increase from the preceding year of $47,190.87. The revenues for the last fiscal year including $165,000 from the Deposit Fund, was $300,792.10. The increase of this fund, and of its income, will justify you in increasing the amount of the distribution among the common schools from $285,000 to $300,000 per annum.

It appears from the latest returns to the Superintendent of Common Schools that there are in the State 11,397 school districts; that the whole number of children taught therein, in the year 1849, was 749,500, of all ages; and that the whole amount paid for teachers' wages during that year was $1,322,696.24, of which $767,389.20 was contributed from the State Treasury, and raised by county and town taxation.

ledge and elevate the condition of the people. In its formation I would recommend an additional department for instruction in the mechanic arts. Identified in interest, each imparting strength and vigor to the other, the agricultural and mechanical classes combined may be said to constitute the substantial power and greatness of the commonwealth. The free spirit of our institutions and the incentives to effort in which this country abounds, are peculiarly favorable to the development of inventive genius and rapid advances in the useful arts. Our unparalleled progress may be attributed in no small degree to the successful skill of our artizans in originating and perfecting the varied improvements which increase the productiveness of labor in most branches of human industry. Yet from the nature of their pursuits and the necessity which subjects them to a life of toil, too many of our youthful mechanics are deprived of those means of intellectual improvement which the State has provided for other professions. The beneficial effects of an agricultural and mechanical school will not be limited to the individuals who may participate directly in its privileges. The students graduating from such an institution, elevated in character by moral and intellectual training, and endued with that knowledge of the natural laws and practical sciences which unites manual labor with the highest exercise of the reasoning faculties, will become teachers in their turn, imparting to those around them the light of their own intelligence, and conferring dignity upon the common pursuits of industry by an example of honorable usefulness, in their varied occupations. The elevation of the laboring classes is an object worthy of the highest ambition of the statesman and the patriot. Under our republican system of government the political power of the State must always reside among the men of industry and toil, whose virtuous energy is their best patrimony. The intelligence which qualifies them for the duties of self-government, affords the only sure guarantee for the perpetuity of our free institutions.

The condition of the charitable establishments sustained in whole or in part by the bounty of the State, will be exhibited by the annual reports of the several institutions. The Asylum for the instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, and the Institution for the Blind, continue to be a source of inestimable blessings to the unfortunate beings who, in the dispensations of our common Father, have been deprived of the best faculties of man. The New-York Hospital is in a highly satisfactory condition, and its enlightened management has contributed largely to the relief of human suffering. I consider these institutions worthy of the fostering patronage of the Legislature. The administration of the State Lunatic Asylum at Utica, is eminently successful. On the 30th of November, the number of inmates was 429; the number admitted during the year was 367; the number discharged was 336, and of deaths 51. Of the patients discharged from the institution, 171 were fully restored to reason, and 49 were improved but not entirely recovered. Dr. Benedict, the present superintendent, has afforded high evidence of his capacity to carry forward the work of benevolence and humanity so nobly begun by the lamented Brigham.

I deem it my duty to renew the recommendation made by my predecessor to the last Legislature, of the establishment of an institution for the instruction and improvement of idiots. This unfortunate class of beings, whose deplorable condition excites the sympathy of every heart, have been too long overlooked in our legislation for the relief of the helpless. Until within a recent period, it was the general belief that the idiot, apparently bereft of intellect, is not susceptible of moral or mental improvement. But experience has demonstrated that he retains some latent germs of intelligence which may be developed by patient culture, and that he may be subjected to healthful discipline, employed in useful labor, and raised to a condition of comparative comfort. Great success has attended the institutions established for the instruction of this class of sufferers in France, Germany and England. A similar school, recently formed in Massachusetts, has been attended with the most satisfactory results. I commend these facts to your attention, convinced that considerations of policy and humanity should prompt you to rear an institution which will complete our system of public charities, and exalt still higher the character of the State for beneficence and philanthropy.

The condition of the State Prisons will be fully presented in the annual report of the Inspectors. The Sing Sing and Clinton prisons continue to be a heavy charge on the treasury, though it is but just to remark that much of the large expenditure at the former establishment, during the past year, was occasioned by the erection of permanent buildings. It is gratifying to observe that in all our penitentiaries an admirable system of discipline prevails, conducive to the physical comfort and moral welfare of their inmates.

I would respectfully call your attention to the importance of enlarging the House of Refuge for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents in the city of New-York. The number of delinquents is constantly increasing, while the accommodations of the institution have not been materially extended since its foundation. The managers have found it necessary to notify the Sheriffs of counties that no more delinquents can be received, until further notice; and a large number of youthful convicts are consequently committed to the prisons. The crowded state of the establishment baffles the efforts of the managers to classify offenders; and the erring youth, whose wanderings may be traced to early destitution or abandonment is brought into intimate association with the hardened criminal. Thus the humane design of the institution, the reformation of juvenile offenders, is in a great degree defeated. These evils require a prompt and adequate remedy. The Western House of Refuge has been brought into use under circumstances which give assurance of satisfactory results. The admirable structure and arrangement of the establishment, and its successful administration thus far, reflect credit upon the Trustees who have been prompted to give their time and efforts to this noble undertaking by a spirit of enlightened and disinterested philanthropy. I refer you to the report of the Trustees for the progress and present condition of the institution, and respectfully recommend such further appropriation as may be necessary to complete the new erections commenced last year.

The present condition of our militia establishment, and of the military property belonging to the State, will be exhibited in the annual reports of the Adjutant General and the Commissary General. To preserve the efficiency of the militia system by laws calculated to excite and cherish a military spirit in the ranks of our citizen soldiery, always the main strength and reliance of the country in time of war, is an object eminently deserving the attention of the Legislature.

The law of 1849, in relation to emigrant passengers, providing for the relief of the sick and destitute among them by a tax, intended to protect the community from unjust and oppressive burdens, has been efficiently administered and continues to produce favorable results. It is to be regretted that existing legal provisions have not, in all cases, furnished adequate protection against the practice of frauds on those unfortunate emigrants, destitute of friends and ignorant of our laws, who are constantly landing on our shores, and if practicable, further legal protection ought to be provided.

The last Legislature, acting in pursuance of the humane suggestions of my predecessor, passed a law designed to secure to each family which possesses a freehold estate, a home of limited value, in case of the embarrassment or bankruptcy of its head. It is represented that the clause requiring a special registry of each homestead intended to be held subject to this exemption, renders the law practically inoperative from the aversion felt by most men in good credit to advertising an apprehension of insolvency. I would respectfully submit to your consideration whether the benevolent principles of the law should be made to depend upon a condition with which most men will omit to comply. In other words, ought not the rule and the exception to be reversed?

I would also suggest that the exemption afforded by this law ought not to include debts contracted previous to the purchase of the estate by the debtor. Justice, no less than sound policy, dictates that neither temptation nor opportunity should be given for the practice of fraud upon confiding creditors.

I would respectfully recommend that an adequate appropriation be made for a more complete exploration of the lands belonging to the State, in the northern counties, with a view to plank roads and other facilities of access. It is believed that by improving the means of communication, some large tracts might be brought into market and sold for actual cultivation. The settlement and improvement of these remote forests is a matter of much public importance, and should be encouraged by a liberal policy. The land should be divided into convenient farms, and offered to actual settlers for small prices, intended only to indemnify the treasury for actual expenditures. However desirable it may be deemed, under monarchical governments, to have the national domain held by a few, it is important in a republic, that it should be divided, as far as practicable, among the many. Resolutions were adopted by the last Legislature, with signal unanimity, in favor of opening the public lands of the Union, without price, to landless settlers. Those resolutions, in their general scope and purpose, have my hearty concurrence. Some of the evils resulting from large landed accumulations, and especially from extensive leasehold estates, have been fully realized in this State. Our new constitution has wisely abolished feudal tenures, and prohibited the future creation of perpetual leases. Contracts of this nature, made at an anterior period, in harmony with laws then existing, have been and must be respected in all our legislation. It can hardly be doubted that the occupation of the large manors in this section of the State, under the system of perpetual leases adopted in the early settlement of the country, has been highly detrimental to the interests of both proprietors and tenants, for some years past. Non-payment of rent, litigation, resistance of law, irregular combinations and popular discontent, in its most repulsive form, have checked our progress and disfigured our public history. I consider it of much importance that these evils should be remedied by just and liberal arrangements, which shall respect the rights and promote the true welfare of both parties. The perpetuation of leasehold estates, embracing a large agricultural population, is repugnant to our national policy and to the liberal spirit of our institutions. It is a kind of tenure which has become odious to tenants, exceedingly inconvenient and expensive to landlords, and every way adverse to the interests of both.

The manly independence which belongs to the character of an American citizen, demands the absolute control and ownership in fee of the soil, improved and cultivated by his labor, and on which he is to spend his life and rear his children. Experience has shown that leasehold estates are peculiarly unfavorable to the development of the country and the progress of the people in improvement and enterprise.

It is to be hoped that such liberal terms of sale will be offered by landlords, and accepted by tenants, as shall soon put an end to a tenure which ought no longer to be desired by either. It is worthy of your consideration whether this desirable result may not be promoted by the friendly mediation of the State, on principles having the free assent and voluntary concurrence of both proprietors and occupants. A purchase of the manorial titles by the State, and a re-sale to the tenants on equitable terms, would be preferable to the present state of things. All remedies inconsistent with those rights of property and the obligation of contracts which are secured by law, and which government is bound to enforce, must be delusive and impracticable. The sanctity of private rights and the supremacy of the law must be maintained under all circumstances. Consistently with these principles, which I hold to be paramount and inviolable, I believe it is practicable to terminate the evils complained of, provided the parties to be affected will adopt a rational view of their own interests, and co-operate in an equitable and enlightened system of adjustment.

The condition of our statute laws will require your most serious consideration. At present great uncertainty exists and great difficulty frequently arises in ascertaining what is the law upon many questions relating to the rights and interests of our citizens, and to the duties and powers of public officers. This difficulty is most severely felt in the interpretation of the statutes relating to the administration of justice. The Revised Statutes are partially in operation: the judiciary acts of 1847 and 1848, with the subsequent amendments to them, are also in operation to some extent, and the Code of Practice effects changes not only in remedies but in rights, sometimes abrogating previous amendments wholly, sometimes modifying them, and often introducing provisions which limit or qualify their operation. That code was not a complete system in itself, but assumed the existence of extensive legal principles and of a knowledge of the practice and pleadings prevalent when it was adopted. It was a series of amendments to the existing law, operating in form upon remedies, but in reality often upon rights, so far as they were affected by the remedy. It was, therefore, circumscribed and partial in that class of cases. The commissioners doubtless considered it beyond the limits of their authority to make general and comprehensive provisions, in respect to the rights thus affected.

The vast and alarming increase of litigation which seems to overwhelm some of the courts, and threatens to obstruct the administration of justice, particularly in the court of last resort, has doubtless arisen in some degree from this uncertainty. My acquaintance with the practical operations of the new provisions referred to, does not qualify me to pronounce upon their merits, nor do I feel competent to judge how far the complete code of practice reported by the commissioners, is calculated to remedy the evils under consideration. But it is evident that our system of laws cannot be complete until an entire harmony is produced between the principles introduced by the code of practice and our general statutes. They must in some way be adapted to each other. This was probably intended to be effected by that provision of the Constitution which required the appointment of commissioners to reduce all the Laws of the State to a system. The considerations I have already suggested render this a duty of pressing importance. The prompt organization of such a board would relieve the Legislature from applications for partial and imperfect amendments, and if we should not obtain a complete body of the whole law, such as was contemplated by some at the adoption of the Constitution, we may at least hope for a revision and condensation of our statutes. The last Legislature adjourned without acting on the final report of the Commissioners on Practice and Pleading. It will be your duty to take such action as will ensure a deliberate examination and thorough analysis of this new code of civil procedure, with a view to its adoption, in such form as may receive your sanction, at the earliest practicable period.

I am of opinion that the multiplication of suits in the supreme court, which produces serious delays in the course of justice, would be essentially diminished by restoring to the county courts a more extended civil jurisdiction. As the county judge is required to hold courts of general sessions for criminal business, at which juries are necessarily in attendance, the public convenience would be greatly promoted by conferring jurisdiction in ordinary civil cases. Serious doubts have existed concerning the constitutional power of the Legislature in this respect. It appears to me that the decision of the supreme court, in two districts, after full deliberation, sustaining the constitutionality of the act of 1847, conferring civil jurisdiction on the county courts in special cases, should be deemed sufficient to put the question at rest.

I deem it my duty to call your attention to an important defect in the statutory provision for the punishment of embezzlement as a crime. The operation of the law is confined to the officers, agents, clerks, or servants of private persons and of incorporated companies. It is manifestly proper, if not necessary, that this provision should be extended to include all public officers who may be charged with the collection or custody of moneys, whether belonging to the public or to individuals.

I concur in the views submitted to the Legislature in the last message of my predecessor, in favor of the erection of a new and convenient building for the State Library. The present accommodations are altogether inadequate, and the difficulty is increasing with the extension of the library from year to year.

The alarming increase of bribery in our popular elections, demands your serious attention. The preservation of our liberties depends on the purity of the elective franchise, and its independent exercise by the citizen; and I trust you will adopt such measures as shall effectually protect the ballot box from all corrupting influences.

Our circulating medium is believed to be in a sound condition. The report from the Bank Department exhibits a large increase of banking capital, under the general law, during the last year. The gradual reduction of our State debt, makes it necessary that some other form of security should be accepted as a basis for circulation. I would respectfully recommend the admission under proper restrictions, of the stocks created by the incorporated cities of this State. In this connection I must invite your attention to the provision of the Constitution making it the duty of the Legislature to restrict the powers of cities in respect to taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts and loaning their credit. The performance of this duty ought not to be longer deferred.

The growing importance of the Bank Department, the vast extent of its operations and the peculiar responsibility attending them, render it important in my judgment that this Department should be detached from the office of the Comptroller, already overburthened with duties, and erected into a distinct office, to be placed under the charge and direction of a competent commissioner.

The oppressive and unequal operation of the laws regulating the assessment of property, is a subject of general and just complaint. A large share of the personal property escapes assessment altogether, while in many portions of the State, real estate is estimated by the assessors at less than half its actual value. To the extent that a portion of the taxable property of the State escapes assessment, the burthen of taxation is unjustly increased on the remainder. These evils demand an effective remedy. A careful revision of the existing laws has become indispensable, and I trust the subject will engage your early and earnest attention.

In compliance with section five of article four of the Constitution, I communicate herewith a statement of reprieves, commutations, and pardons, granted during the past year, by my predecessor.

Your attention is requested to the difficulties which have recently arisen between our citizens residing in Richmond county, and the inhabitants of New-Jersey, in reference to the oyster fisheries in New-York and Newark bays.

Since the adjournment of our last Legislature, the grave questions respecting the organization of the newly acquired territories of the Union, which had for some years involved the country in agitation and strife, have been definitely acted on by Congress. California has been welcomed as the thirty-first of the States composing the Federal Union; the disputed boundary of Texas has been settled; while New-Mexico and Utah have been organized by acts which in effect leave the Mexican law prohibiting slavery in force, and refer the question of its admission or exclusion to the ultimate decision of the people concerned. It is generally believed that the public sentiment in these newly organized communities, co-operating with other causes, will prevent the introduction of slavery, from which the country was exempt when it was conquered by our arms.

Notwithstanding the violent discussions which have agitated the country, and the wide diversity of opinion which existed in respect to the questions involved in the recent action of Congress, a general disposition is evinced to acquiesce in the measures referred to, and to regard them as a final settlement of these territorial controversies. The people of this State continue to indulge a strong desire that harmony and mutual good will may prevail between all portions of our widely extended republic. They are a law-abiding people; they cherish the most friendly sentiments towards their brethren of the South; and have always conceded to the slave States the entire right to maintain and regulate slavery within their own limits, and to exercise all those rights without abridgment or hindrance which the Constitution confers. More than this ought not to be claimed or expected.

It is a source of profound surprise and regret, that any portion of the people of the southern States should find, in the terms of settlement finally agreed upon by Congress, an occasion for the continuance of sectional jealousy, or a supposed necessity for nurturing the spirit of disunion. In the admission of California and the organization of governments for the territories, Congress adopted the principle, originally contended for by many leading statesmen of the South, of leaving the matter to the uncontrolled action of the people themselves. I cannot but persuade myself that the feelings of alienation exhibited by some of our fellow-citizens in the southern States, must proceed from an unhappy misconception of the views and sentiments entertained by the northern people. Great injustice is done in assuming that we have intended or now meditate encroachments upon the just rights of any portion of the confederacy. During the entire period of our national history, the people of New-York have manifested a spirit of kindly deference to the feelings and prejudices of our sister States, and a readiness to sacrifice every thing but principle and honor for the sake of union and concord. Their course has been distinguished by a broad spirit of nationality, elevated far above the indulgence of local views or sectional partialities.

The limits of this communication will not permit me to recall all the evidences in which our history abounds of the generous spirit of concession which New-York has uniformly manifested, as a prominent member of the Federal Union. For more than three-fourths of the period which has elapsed since the adoption of the Constitution, southern statesmen, elevated by the aid of her voice, have filled the Presidential office. Every peaceful extension of our southern territorial limits were made with her concurrence, until by successive steps all the slave territory on the North American Continent was brought within the boundaries of the United States. Although every new acquisition diminished the relative weight of New-York in the National Councils, she waived all views of State power or aggrandizement, and yielded to the considerations urged by other sections in favor of annexing the contiguous countries.

Nor is this all. Far from invading any of the constitutional rights of the southern States, our people and their representatives have always respected those rights, and abided cheerfully by all the conditions of the federal compact. It should not have been regarded as an encroachment upon the rights of any State, that we objected to the extension of slavery over a country acquired by our common efforts, and which had been made free by the action of its own legitimate authorities. No wrong was inflicted upon any State by the effort to give to the people of the conquered territories a government best adapted to their sentiments and their future happiness. By the ordinance of 1787, a large portion of the American people had declared their conviction that slavery ought not to be extended over free territory: but the exclusion of that institution from the States of the northwest was not then deemed sufficient to prevent the formation of the Federal Union. The same sentiment still exists in the northern mind, to be manifested whenever and only when its exercise is provoked by new aggressions; and I cannot concede that it affords any ground of complaint on the part of any of the States, still less that it can justify secession, revolution, or any effort to overthrow the free Constitution established by our fathers.

I have thus adverted to the course of this State in its national relations, from no desire to revive past discussions; but from a conviction that it is due to our people to vindicate them from imputations of sectional prejudice, indifference to Constitutional obligations, or hostility to the rights of other portions of the republic. If there is danger to the Union from any quarter I rejoice to say that it will not be found within our borders. Men of extreme opinions may be found in every community; but the great body of the people of New-York are aware that the Constitution of the United States was framed and adopted in the spirit of compromise, and that it must be faithfully maintained in the same spirit. They are attached to the Union; they cherish an ardent devotion to it; and desire to see it preserved by manifestations of mutual deference and regard between the states composing it.

Although New-York might maintain a respectable attitude before the world, and would not fail to preserve her liberties as an independent State, she would regard a dissolution of the Union from any cause as the greatest calamity which could befall mankind. Whenever the American Union is destroyed the cause of constitutional government will be perilled by the shock, and the friends of liberty every where will mourn over the fall of a mighty fabric which now animates the hopes and commands the admiration of the world. Every patriot must desire that all causes of irritation or disagreement between the different parts of our common country may speedily disappear. It should be the aim of all to allay sectional animosities, and to restore those kindly sentiments which united our ancestors in noble efforts and common trials. The questions resulting from our recent conquests having been disposed of by the action of Congress, there can be no sufficient cause for jealousies and dissensions between the North and the South. The most serious of our past differences were produced by territorial acquisitions, and they strikingly admonish us that it is indispensable to our future peace and happiness that bounds should be set to the spirit of conquest; and that the energies of the general government should be directed to those great and beneficent objects in which all sections have a common interest and for which the Constitution was intended.

The provision of the federal compact requiring the return of "fugitives from labor," however repugnant to the sentiments of many of our people, is of paramount authority, and like every other constitutional obligation should be observed in good faith. In legislating upon a subject of such difficulty, it was obvious that more than usual care was necessary that in enforcing the claims of one section of the country, we should not trespass upon the rights of the other. While the claim of the southern slaveholder to recapture his slave is fully admitted, the right of the northern freeman to prove and defend his freedom is equally sacred. Both are alike under the protecting care of our common constitution.

It cannot be denied that the recent act of Congress for giving fuller effect to the provision requiring the return of fugitive slaves has excited dissatisfaction in many portions of the country, carrying them almost to the extreme of threatening resistance to the law. But all good citizens will recollect that whatever may be their individual feelings or opinions in regard to the policy or propriety of any legislative enactment, it is their plain duty, so long as it remains in force, to sustain the authorities legitimately charged with its execution. Apprehensions have been entertained that under the hastily considered provisions of the act, passed during a period of unusual agitation, persons of color claiming to be free, and really free, are not allowed those reasonable opportunities and those customary legal safeguards necessary to enable them to establish by adequate proof the fact of their freedom. A recent case has shown this belief to be not merely speculative, and that the danger that a freeman under the summary mode in which that law can be executed, may be hurried into captivity, is not wholly imaginary. We cannot and we do not believe that the south, any more than the north, aims at or desires such a result—or will insist on retaining provisions leading to such exciting consequences.

We shall rely not only on their sense of propriety and reciprocal justice, but their calm conviction that the law itself, to be permanent, must be reasonable, for their uniting, after due reflection, with their brethren of the North in a kind and dispassionate spirit, in reviewing such clauses as may be found defective or objectionable, and in consenting to such judicious modifications as may command general approval. In the meantime, our people must be left free to examine its provisions and practical operation. Their vital and fundamental right to discuss the merits of this or any other law passed by their representatives, constitutes the very basis of our republican system, and can never be surrendered. Any attempt to restrain it would prove far more dangerous than its freest exercise. But in all such discussions we should divest ourselves of sectional or partisan prejudice, and exercise a spirit of comprehensive patriotism, respecting alike the rights of every portion of our common country.

Before dismissing the subject of our federal relations, I deem it my duty to advert to the serious evils which some of our most important interests have suffered from the failure of Congress to extend that protection to domestic industry which experience has shown to be necessary to sustain certain branches of manufactures against foreign competition. We see the effects of the tariff of 1846, in the suspension of many establishments, not only in our own, but our sister States, involving large investments of capital, depressing not only the labors of the manufacturer and mechanic, but impairing the market they had created for the products of our agriculture. It is reasonable to hope that this state of things, so injurious and unnecessary, may be remedied in some degree at least, by judicious and timely action in Congress.

The interests of this State, in common with other sections of the country, have also suffered much detriment from the neglect of the General Government to make appropriations for the improvement of lake harbors and the removal of obstructions in the Hudson river. For more than twelve years, the great power conferred on Congress by the constitution to aid and protect navigation on our national channels of commerce, has virtually been held in abeyance, dormant and unexercised. This dereliction of duty has caused great embarrassment to all the interests connected with our internal trade. It has compelled the State to incur a heavy expenditure which should be borne by the federal treasury. The canal authorities are now engaged in the construction of an expensive pier at the harbor of Buffalo, for the safety and accommodation of the lake shipping entering at that port. The expense of this work is estimated at over $200,000. An account of this expenditure will be kept under the directions of the Canal Board, and at a proper juncture, the amount expended ought, and doubtless will be refunded to the State by the general government. Every consideration of interest and duty demands that the powers belonging to Congress for the regulation and protection of commerce, should be steadily and vigorously exercised by such constitutional action as may best advance the national welfare and fulfil one of the leading purposes of the federal compact. It is a subject of sincere congratulation, that under our beneficent system of government which commits to the people the choice of their rulers the federal administration has been entrusted to statesmen of large experience, expansive patriotism and sound national principles, and that we may look to them with confidence to give full effect to all measures which may be adopted by the representatives of the states and the people, calculated to protect the interests and promote the prosperity of the Union.

Since the adjournment of the last Legislature, the country has been called upon to mourn the loss of a beloved and venerated Chief Magistrate. ZACHARY TAYLOR, the hero without fear, and the patriot without reproach, whose exploits had won the admiration, while his virtues gained the affections of his countrymen, was summoned to his fathers. He went down to the grave crowned with honors, and lamented by a grateful people, to whose glory and welfare his life had been devoted. By this afflictive dispensation of Providence, the duties of the Chief Executive office were devolved upon an eminent citizen of our own State, in whose patriotism the people have long reposed the highest confidence.

It affords me pleasure to state that arrangements are in progress for sending forward numerous specimens of American skill and workmanship to be displayed at the exhibition of the works of industry of all nations, to be holden in London in May next. Many of the manufacturers and artisans of this State, prompted by a spirit of liberality and national pride, in the highest degree creditable to their patriotism, have determined to furnish a variety of articles intended to present a favorable view of the progress of the useful and ornamental arts in this country. In an enterprise so honorable to the age, and so well calculated to promote the interests of peace and civilization throughout the world, the State should not fail to evince an interest by extending every reasonable facility and encouragement; and I would respectfully recommend that provision be made for the appointment of an agent to attend the exhibition and take charge of the various fabrics and productions which may be forwarded by our citizens.

In entering upon the discharge of the high trust committed to me by the people, it is due to the occasion no less than to my own feelings, to express my grateful sense of the public confidence, and to assure you that, with a sincere distrust of my ability, it will be my constant aim to perform my duty with firmness and independence, and with an earnest desire to co-operate with you in all measures calculated to improve the condition, exalt the fame, or promote the happiness of our favored commonwealth.

"Resolved, (If the Assembly concur,) That as the federal constitution was formed and adopted expressly to secure the blessings of liberty to the people of the United States and their posterity, therefore the federal government ought to relieve itself from all responsibility for the existence or continuance of slavery or the slave trade wherever it has the constitutional power over those subjects, and our Senators in Congress are hereby instructed, and our Representatives are requested to use their best efforts to procure the passage of laws that will effectually and forever put an end to the slave trade in the District of Columbia.

"Resolved, (If the Assembly concur,) That the determination indicated by the governors' messages, and the resolutions of the legislatures of various of the slaveholding states, and by the representatives of such states in Congress, to extend domestic slavery over the territory acquired by the late treaty of peace with the republic of Mexico, we feel bound to oppose by all constitutional means; and recognizing the constitutional power of Congress to prohibit, by positive enactment, the extension of slavery into free territory, our Senators in Congress are hereby instructed, and our Representatives requested to use their best efforts to insert such a positive prohibition into any law they may pass for the government of the territory in question.

To the Legislature of New-York:

The undersigned, have with some surprise, received information that a paper purporting to be the annual report of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, has been transmitted to the Legislature by the Auditor of the Canal Department, over the signatures of a minority of said Commissioners; and being satisfied that this paper is not the annual report required by law to be made by the Fund Commissioners, we have felt it to be our duty to protest against the reception of said paper, by the Legislature, as the annual report of the Fund Commissioners.

When, where, or by whom, said paper was prepared, we are not informed. No meeting of the Board of Fund Commissioners was ever organized, for the purpose of making or considering the annual report for 1851, of which we have any knowledge, nor do we believe that a majority of the said Commissioners were ever convened on the subject of this report. We are of the opinion that it was prepared by the Auditor or clerk of the Canal Department, and sent around to the different officers for the signatures of such of the Commissioners, as were willing to take it upon trust, omitting to call upon those who might be too curious to ascertain its contents before giving to it the authority of their signatures.

The paper was sent to the Lieutenant Governor, with a request that he sign it; but he declined doing so, until an opportunity was afforded him of understanding its contents, saying to the messenger, that he would call at the Canal Department the next morning and examine it. He did call, and was informed that the paper had already been transmitted to the Legislature.

The Attorney General never heard of the existence of such a paper, until after it had been sent to the Legislature.

The Treasurer was absent from Albany when the so called report was completed, and it is understood that his name was placed to it by a clerk in his department.

Whether this paper is one to which we could yield our assent or not, we do not know, being entirely ignorant of its contents; but we do know that it is not the report of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, required by the statute, and we respectfully ask that it may be returned to the Auditor of the Canal Department, to the end that the annual report of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, may be prepared and transmitted to the Legislature, in conformity to law.

L. S. CHATFIELD,

Attorney General,

S. E. CHURCH,

Lieut. Governor.

Mr. Elderkin moved to recall the said report from the printer.

Mr. Wheeler moved to lay said motion on the table.

Mr. Lesley offered for the consideration of the House, resolutions in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, (If the Senate concur,) 1st. That labor is the primary source of all wealth, and that it is the duty of Congress to legislate for its encouragement, and to use all proper means to maintain and make certain its rewards, by enacting such revenue laws as will provide for the wants of government, and at the same time shield domestic labor from the desperate and disastrous floodings of foreign products.

Resolved, 2d. That in our judgment the tariff law of 1846 is mainly defective by reason of its ad valorem character, experience during the past four years having shewn that such a system is fraught with serious evils; we believe that it was designed to afford a fair measure of protection to the industrial interests of the country, whereas in practice it has utterly failed to secure this end : for every change of price has changed the rate of duty, and made it utterly impossible for the manufacturer of any article or fabric in this country, whereof labor constitutes any considerable part of the cost, to sustain himself against the fluctuations and uncertainties consequent upon the system ; we believe this was not the intention of those who framed that law.

Resolved, 3d. That we do not approve of high duties upon foreign goods, but we recommend the substitution of specific for ad valorem rates (in all cases where the same is practicable) upon all such articles as are produced in this country, so adjusted as to keep the labor thus employed fully occupied and fairly compensated, and at the same so balanced as to sustain the home manufacturer up to the point of full production, beyond which foreign goods should be admitted freely ; this would secure the two-fold object of revenue to the government, and give support to the home labor employed in the home manufacture at fair prices, and likewise in any emergency ensure a supply of all articles of the first necessity from native sources.

Resolved, 4th. That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use all proper means to obtain such a modification of the tariff law of 1846, as will substitute for the existing ad valorem rates a system of specific duties, so far as practicable, which will afford revenue sufficient to meet the wants of government, and at the same time secure a reasonable yet permanent advantage to American over foreign labor.

Whereas, the sentiments and feeling of the people of this State, relative to their estimate of the value of the Union, and adhesion to the national compact and duties under it, are misrepresented, whereby jealousies are created and fostered; therefore,

Resolved, (If the Senate concur,) That the people of this State have not faltered, nor wavered in their devotion to the Constitution, nor in their attachment to the Union, from the hour of their formation and adoption; but on the contrary, have continued to regard them with increased ardor and affection, as time and experience have developed and manifested their fitness to secure the prosperity, happiness and liberty of the country and its citizens.

Resolved, (If the Senate concur,) That the determination of the people of this State, to adopt and sanction all lawful measures to prevent the extension of slavery or involuntary servitude beyond its present limits in this Republic, is unaltered and unalterable, and is the natural and legitimate result of that liberal and enlightened policy of education which has been adopted by the State, and which is so admirably adapted to secure in the public mind that deep and abiding love of liberty and justice, which begets an abhorrence of slavery, and seeks to be absolved from all responsibility for its continuance, while it prompts to the faithful discharge of all constitutional obligations, and will not sanction nor tolerate any unconstitutional interference with the rights of the States where slavery exists, but concedes and acknowledges the constitutional right of their own citizens, freely to judge and decide for themselves relative to its continuance within their respective borders.

Resolved, (If the Senate concur,) That while the people of this State disapprove of the act known as the fugitive slave law, and earnestly desire and insist upon its modification, in such manner as to guard free persons from being enslaved under its provisions, and so as to secure a trial by jury in the State where found to all claimed under it as having escaped from labor or service justly due in some other State, they acquiesce in the act of President Fillmore, in signing the bill after its passage by Congress, upon the ground that the people should be left free to enact, by and through their representatives in Congress, such laws as they may deem their interests to demand, without the incitement of Executive influence, or the obstruction of the Executive veto, except in cases of manifest violation of the Constitution, corruption, or want of due deliberation; and that the deliberate opinion of the Attorney General is sufficient justification for the action of the Executive upon the constitutionality of measures submitted to him by Congress for his approval, or otherwise.

Ordered, That the said resolutions be laid upon the table.

Resolved, (If the Senate concur,) That the Legislature of the State New-York cordially responds to the patriotic sentiments and wise counsels contained in the last annual message of the President of the United States.

Resolved, (If the Senate concur,) That the series of measures passed at the last session of Congress, with a view of healing sectional differences, though not free from imperfections, do yet, in the mutual dependence and connection, form a system of compromise, the best that could be obtained from conflicting interests and opinions, and under all circumstances well adapted to conciliate and harmonise ; that they ought to be regarded as a settlement, in principle and substance, of the dangerous and exciting subjects which they embrace, and as well should be acquiesced in until time and experience shall demonstrate the necessity of further legislation to guard against evasion and abuse.

Resolved, (If the Senate concur,) That the people of the State of New-York are now, as they have ever been, sincerely attached to the union of the states ; that they regard the constitution of the United States as the palladium of political safety and prosperity ; that they will faithfully adhere to it in all its parts, execute its stipulations and maintain and defend its compromises, and that, without reference to the past, it is their earnest desire, as it will be their effort, that amity may be established among the states upon firm and lasting foundations, harmony preserved in the national counsels, and our glorious Union made perpetual.

Resolved, (If the Senate,) That the Governor be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, the Governor of the several states, and the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

By unanimous consent,

Mr. J. Benedict gave notice that he would, at an early day, ask leave to introduce a bill levying tolls upon freight and passengers carried upon the New-York and Erie and other railroads in this State.

Mr. Ward offered the following amendment to Mr. Varnum's resolutions: strike out all after the word "resolved," and insert, "That it is inexpedient and unnecessary for this Legislature to pass any resolutions bearing on the subject of slavery, or touching the question of the fugitive slave law passed at the last session of Congress, that law being acquiesced in by a vast majority of sober and thinking men of all parties in this State and throughout the Union, and that agitation in this House will have no tendency to quiet whatever agitation may exist from without it.

Mr. J. Benedict offered the following amendment to Mr. Ward's amendments: strike out all between the words "Congress" and "agitation," and insert in lieu thereof, the words "inasmuch as," which amendment was accepted by Mr. Ward.

Mr. Elderkin appealed from the decision of the chair.

Mr. Burroughs moved to refer said appeal to the Attorney General for his opinion.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the House would agree to the said motion of Mr. Burroughs, and it was determined in the negative.

Mr. Speaker then, under the provisions of the 7th rule, gave the reasons for his decision, as follows:

The bill now before the House revives the act of March 19, 1829, by which a corporation called the Sodus Canal Company is created and empowered to construct and maintain a canal, of the same dimensions as the Erie canal, from the Erie canal to Sodus bay; "to sell or lease any and all surplus waters of said [Sodus] canal not wanted for the most commodious navigation thereof;" and in case of disagreement with the owners, "to enter upon, take possession of and use all such lands, real estates and streams, as shall be necessary for the purposes aforesaid," under such regulations as are therein prescribed. The corporation is also empowered to collect tolls on all articles transported on the canal.

The bill prohibits the corporation from "purchasing or holding for the use of their canal any living or durable streams of water which are naturally tributary to the Seneca river or any of its branches;"—and also from "drawing from the Erie canal any more than the surplus waters discharged into the level of the said Erie canal from the west," and also from "drawing the said level below the height ordered and fixed by the Canal Commissioner having charge of that section;" and severe penalties are affixed to any violation of these provisions.

The bill, therefore, permits the Sodus Canal Company to use the surplus waters discharged from the Erie canal at their point of junction for purposes of navigation between the Erie canal and Sodus bay; it also gives them power to collect tolls on all articles transported, and to sell or lease such of the surplus waters of their own canal as they do not need for said purposes of navigation.

The Constitution of this State (art. 1, sec. 9;) requires that "the assent of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature shall be requisite to every bill appropriating the public moneys or property, for local or private purposes,"

It is held by those who have taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair, that the surplus waters appropriated by this bill are public property; and that the use to be made of them,—the purpose to which they are to be applied,—is local or private; and that the bill, therefore, comes within the requisitions of this section of the Constitution.

I. In the first place, it may well be doubted, whether surplus waters are public property within the meaning of this constitutional provision. The State has a right to take the waters of private streams for public uses. The waters in question are taken from Lake Erie, diverted from their natural channel which would take them into Lake Ontario, and appropriated to the use of the Erie canal. While in that canal they are unquestionably the property of the State; but when they become surplus, when the State has no further use for them and they are discharged from the canal, it may well be doubted whether the State retains, or can retain, any property in them. This view is fully sustained by a decision in the Court of Chancery, in the case of Varick vs. Smith, (see Prigg's Chancery Rep. 9, p. 560) in which the Vice Chancellor, Gridley, decided that water, accumulated in a dam for the use of the Oswego canal, from the moment it passed over the top of the dam, was incapable of being appropriated to the use of the canal and ceased to be consecrated to the public use. "The public property in it," he says "had ceased to exist." So of the surplus waters of the Erie canal. The moment they are discharged from that canal, they cease to be public property. And it is the duty of the State to return them by the nearest route, and at the most convenient point, to their original channel. This route, it may well be maintained, is that of the Sodus canal, which returns these waters to Lake Ontario—the channel from which they were originally diverted.

If this view be correct the State has made no appropriation of public property within the meaning of the Constitution. The surplus waters, the use of which is given to the company, are either not property at all, or they are the private property of individuals. If they are private property, they can only be taken by the State for a public purpose.

II. But conceding that these surplus waters are property—either of the State or of individuals—is the purpose to which they are appropriated either "local" or "private."

These waters are to be used for purposes of navigation; and after those purposes have been served, the surplus may be sold or leased for hydraulic or other purposes. The leading purpose of the appropriation is that of navigation. The canal is open to the use and navigation of the whole world, and is especially designed to afford an easy method of bringing produce from Canada by Lake Ontario to the Erie canal, and to furnish a convenient route for produce, merchandize, &c., from Pennsylvania and Southern New-York, seeking Canada as its market.

1. This, in the opinion of the chair, is not a local purpose. It is true the work is to be constructed in a certain locality, but that does not make the purpose of its construction a "local" purpose. All public works have location—but they are not therefore local. This is not only evident on the slightest reflection, but it is sustained by high authority. In 1823, that distinguished jurist Hon. Samuel A. Talcott, then Attorney-General, being called upon by the Assembly to give an opinion as to whether the bill, appropriating land for the construction of the Albany basin, the fees for the use of which were to go to a private corporation, decided that it was not a local bill. Every expenditure of money for the purpose of erecting works of any description, he says, "may be considered in one point of view a local expenditure, because the money is expended in the construction of works within a particular location. But still it must depend upon the object which is to be answered by these works, whether the purpose of the expenditure is a local one." This Sodus canal is to be constructed for purposes of navigation, and that, in the judgment of the Chair, is not a local purpose.

2. It is urged that this canal is built, maintained and owned by a private corporation, which is authorized to collect tolls for transporting merchandize, &c., upon it; and that this fact makes its object a "private purpose" within the meaning of the Constitution. This construction is not sustained by sound principles or by the decisions of the courts. The canal is constructed for public purposes by a private corporation, which acts simply as the agent of the State, and receives for its compensation the privileges granted in the bill. The cases which sustain this view are numerous: some of them will here be cited.

In the case of Conkling, vs. Baldwin, (4 Wendell, 670) the defendant had been authorized to erect a dam across Seneca river, for the purpose of improving the navigation of that river;—he was also authorized to take lands necessary for the erection of the dam, and to collect tolls for the navigation of the river thus improved. He was also authorized to take water from the dam for hydraulic and other purposes. He was sued for damages, for having overflowed certain lands. And the Supreme Court, Hon. William L. Marcy, Justice, gave judgment in his behalf, on the ground that the work was a public work. I read from that opinion:

"A critical inspection of the act will settle the question as to the nature of the work. The power to erect the dam, it is true, is given to an individual, his heirs and assigns; but I apprehend the nature of the work is not determined by that circumstance. The execution of a public improvement may as well be committed to an individual or to a company as to public agents. What is the declared object of the statute? It is the construction of a dam at the head of McHarrie's rift, of such height as shall be necessary for improving the navigation of Seneca river. It is to be constructed in a particular manner pointed out in the act, so as to admit of the passage of rafts over it. In addition to this, a canal and lock are to be made for the passage of the largest sized boats on the river. The river is a public highway. The objects, so far as I have detailed them, are all of a public nature; but it is not to be expected that either an individual or a company would make a public improvement without provision for remuneration of the expenses which must necessarily attend the operation.

The act secures certain privileges to Mr. Baldwin and his heirs or assigns. It allows him to exact toll on property passing the lock and canal; and to take the water for mills and hydraulic works from the dam; and he is made liable for all injuries which the owners of the lands in the vicinity of the work may sustain thereby. There is nothing in his rights, privileges or duties, that distinguish this work, from that made by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, or the board of commissioners for the construction of the Albany basin. Both of these associations have rights and privileges secured to them which are supposed to be quite sufficient to counterbalance the burdens and responsibilities which they necessarily assume by embarking in the enterprise; but these rights and privileges do not make the undertaking a private matter. The improvement authorized by the act under consideration, has all the characteristics usually marking the distinction between private and public works. I cannot hesitate to pronounce it a public work."

The case now under consideration is even stronger than that thus decided. There, the Seneca river was a public highway—open to the free use and navigation of the world; yet by improving it, Mr. Baldwin made it his private property, so far as to collect tolls for its use, and sell its surplus waters for his own private benefit. Here a new channel of navigation is created by the company, and thrown open to the use of the public, the right of receiving pay for that use being retained. In both cases the execution of a public improvement is committed to a private company:—the objects of both are of a private nature:—in neither case could it be expected that private persons would make a public improvement without compensation: and in both cases the privileges granted are supposed to be sufficient to counterbalance the burdens and responsibilities in the enterprise. But these rights and privileges do not, in the case of the Sodus canal, any more than in that of the Seneca river improvement, make the undertaking a private matter.

Upon the principles thus laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of the Seneca river improvement, therefore, the Chair cannot doubt that the Sodus canal is a public work.

3. Again:—The Sodus canal is evidently quite as much a public work—quite as truly constructed and maintained for a public purpose, as a railroad. Its uses in fact, are precisely the same. Like railroads, it is for the transportation of persons, produce, merchandize &c. Its use is open to all the world. Like railroads, it is owned by a private corporation, for having certain powers and privileges as a compensation its construction. The Chair perceives no difference between this canal and a railroad, sufficient to render inapplicable to the one principles which have been established in regard to the other.

Now it is a well settled principle of law that the State cannot take private property for private uses,—that it cannot authorize any person or persons to enter upon, hold and occupy private property for a private purpose. The case cited by the gentlemen from Onondaga, (Mr. Le Roy) in his argument upon this subject, abundantly establish this principle. Yet the State has repeatedly authorized the seizure of private property for the purpose of constructing railroads, and the Courts of the State, as well as the Supreme Court of the United States, have uniformly affirmed the constitutionality and rightfulness of such seizure. In the case of Beekman vs. Saratoga and Schenectady Railroad Company (2 Paige, 74) it was held by the Chancellor, Welworth, that the construction of a railroad is a public benefit, and that the Legislature may grant power to take private property for all improvements, whereby the public benefit is to be promoted, "whether such improvement is to be effected by the agents of the government, or through the medium of corporate bodies, or of individual enterprise."

A similar decision was given by the Supreme Court, in the case of Bloodgood vs. Mohawk and Hudson Railroad Company, (14 Wendell 57) in which Justice Sutherland uses this emphatic language:—railroads, though made by private corporations, when designed for traveling and transportation, are great public improvements. They can be made profitable to the proprietors only by affording the most liberal accommodations to the public. They are, from their very nature, devoted, and exclusively devoted to the public use." This case was carried up, on writ of error, to the Court of Chancery, and there the decision of the Supreme Court was confirmed, and the principles involved in it discussed at length. (See 18 Wendell, p. 13.)

Besides these decisions of the courts, similar questions have been repeatedly decided in the same way by the Legislature of this State. In 1843 a bill was passed relinquishing a mortgage held by the State on the Erie railroad, and thus in effect appropriating three millions of dollars to that railroad. The Speaker, (Hon. George R. Davis) decided that it was not an appropriation to a local or private, but to a public purpose, giving his reasons at length. (See Ass. Jour. 1843, p. 1033.) And on appeal, his decision was sustained, and the bill thus passed by a majority vote, three-fifths being present.

The general Railroad Act, passed in 1850, (Sess. Laws 1850, p. 24,) which authorizes any private company to take private property for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and collecting tolls upon any railroad, was also passed by a majority vote, three-fifths being present; shewing clearly that in the judgment of the then Speaker and of the Legislature, property taken for a railroad is not taken for any "local or private purpose."

The same principle has been held by the courts of every State in the Union. In fact, every seizure of private property for the construction of a railroad involves the principle that railroads, although constructed and owned by private corporations, and although the entire revenue from them goes into private hands, are nevertheless not made for a private purpose; for if they were, private property could not, under the Constitution of the United States, be seized and appropriated for them. Every public railroad, therefore, is regarded by the Legislatures and by the Courts of all the States, and by the Constitution and Supreme Court of the United States, as a public work.

And if railroads are public works, as these authorities show that they are, then, in the judgment of the Chair, the Sodus canal is also a public work.

4. It is urged that the grant of the use of the surplus waters of the Sodus canal for private purposes makes it a private work. The Chair, however, regards this as incidental to the main purpose of the canal, which cannot be affected by it. It stands upon the same footing as the right to collect tolls for its use; it is part of the compensation allowed by the State to a private company, for the execution of a public improvement. It is precisely analogous to the use of the water for hydraulic and other purposes granted to Mr. Baldwin as part of his compensation for improving the navigation of the Seneca river, and cannot affect the public character of the work.

These considerations lead the Chair to believe that the bill authorizing the construction of the Sodus canal is not a bill for any "local or private purpose." Conceding, therefore, what is nevertheless not beyond dispute or doubt, that the use of the surplus waters appropriated by this act to the use of the Sodus Canal Company, is property, either public or private; within the meaning of the Constitution, the Chair believes that it is not appropriated for any "local or private purpose," but for a public work,—constructed by a private company for the public benefit, that company receiving the tolls authorized to be collected and the proceeds of the sale or lease of the surplus waters, also authorized by this act, as only a just and fair compensation for the construction and maintenance of the canal.

The Chair is therefore of opinion, that, inasmuch as this bill, even if it appropriates public property at all, makes that appropriation for a public use, it falls within the provisions of art. 7, sec. 14 of the Constitution, and that three-fifths of all the members elected are necessary to constitute a quorum for its passage.

Mr. Speaker put the question, "Shall the decision of the chair stand as the judgment of the House?" and it was determined in the affirmative.
